2. The military forces in Manchuria also include a police constabulary, which is divided into three geographical districts, east, north, and south. In general all three districts conform to a standard constabulary pattern, but there are a few local variations.
- a. East Manchuria Constabulary, commander unknown, has about 30,000 troops attached to local hsien and regional governments. The force is not unified and consists largely of virtually autonomous units.
 - b. South Manchuria Constabulary, commanded by LI Ch'eng-fang (李成方), who was formerly in Yenan, has about 15,000 troops.
 - c. North Manchuria Constabulary, commanded by TSUI Kang (崔崗), who is also its political commissar, has about 10,000 troops. This organization includes some Koreans as company and platoon officers.

- * Comment. As the force of the Northeast Military District, the NEPLA is under the jurisdiction of that district, one of six established by the People's Revolutionary Military Committee in November 1949, but the NEPLA does not pursue a separate military program for the Northeast.

-  Comment. Although HSIAO Hua has held previous military and political positions in Manchuria and is reportedly close to MAO Tse-tung, it is believed that he is not the chairman of the Northeast Military District. KAO Kang has been reported as chairman and political advisor , and in Communist publications.

-  Comment. CHOU Pao-chung has been reported previously as deputy commander and political commissar of the Northeast Military District as well as governor of Kirin Province.

- * Comment. There are at the present time only four field armies in the People's Liberation Army. It is possible that source has reported the 1 to 13 Column Divisions of LIN Biao, which were redesignated the 38 to 50 Armies in April 1949.
